Selamat Natal!

Merry Christmas!

Despite being a predominantly Muslim nation, Indonesia embraces Christmas with fervour. Known as Natal in Indonesian, the holiday is marked by various customs. Santa Claus, referred to as Sinterklas in Bahasa Indonesia, derives its name from the Dutch Sinterklaas.

In Bali, a unique Christmas tree crafted from chicken feathers has gained attention and even been exported to European countries. Christian communities in Bali predominantly reside in the southern region of the island. They adorn their villages with penjor, elaborate road decorations made from yellow coconut leaves, symbolizing the Antaboga dragon.

Fireworks are an integral part of Indonesian Christmas celebrations. In many islands, festivities are punctuated by the booming sounds of bamboo cannons firing at every corner of the cities on Christmas Eve. It is common for youngsters to stay awake throughout the night of December 24, engaging in fireworks displays.

Rebuilding Our Seas: Nirwana Gardens Coral Reef Building Project

Nirwana Gardens Commences Coral Reef Building Project to Promote Marine Conservation and Eco-Tourism

In a groundbreaking initiative to enhance marine biodiversity and support sustainable tourism, Nirwana Gardens unveils its latest Coral Reef Building Project. This initiative is to create artificial coral reefs in the pristine waters surrounding Lagoi Bay, a step towards fostering a healthier marine ecosystem and a balance between tourism and nature.

The Coral Reef Building Project represents Nirwana Gardens' commitment to environmental stewardship and responsible tourism practices. The hotel intends to construct artificial reefs using iron racks to provide a solid base for the growth of natural coral structures. These reefs will not only provide habitats for a diverse array of marine life but also serve as educational and research platforms for scientists and tourists alike. Currently, Acropora corals have been secured to these structures with the aim of providing a foundation for coral development and growth. These corals live in colonies and develop in the shape of sunshades and act as an ideal refuge for many invertebrates and fish.

Nirwana Gardens' staff dive into the sea every day to monitor the condition of these corals, and during monsoon season, the six racks are moved to a deeper area to prevent destruction to the racks. This project embodies our dedication to preserving the natural beauty of our beaches, while offering guests a unique opportunity to engage with marine conservation efforts firsthand. We believe in the importance of protecting our oceans and are proud to take proactive steps towards sustainability.

For more information about Nirwana Gardens' Coral Reef Building Project and its sustainability initiatives, please visit www.nirwanagardens.com or contact our Guest Information Centre at gic@nirwanagardens.com for more information and participation details.

Nature Discoveries at Nirwana Gardens

The Yellow-banded Damsel

The Yellow-banded Damsel prefer shallow waters, typically found at depths between 0-26 feet (0-8 meters). Living in ideal environments include coral reefs, seagrass beds, and sandy or muddy bottoms near lagoons and coastal areas. The Yellow-banded Damsel is a fascinating reef inhabitant that plays a role in maintaining the health of the coral reef ecosystem by keeping plankton populations in check.

Hermit Crab

Hermit crabs have a hard shell made of calcium carbonate and protein, which protects their bodies from predators and provides a sturdy body structure. They play a crucial role in the marine ecosystem as scavengers that help clean their environment of dissolved materials in the water. Some species of hermit crabs have striking colors and patterns, while others can adapt to their environment to avoid predators.

Cyrenid bivalves

Nestled in the nutrient-rich mudflats of mangrove ecosystems, Cyrenid bivalves, belonging to the family Cyrenidae, offer a captivating glimpse into the diverse world of mollusks. These remarkable bivalves are not only integral to the health of their habitats but also provide culinary delights for local communities.

Heart Cockle

Heart Cockle with the scientific name Corculum Cardissa. It is a small, marine bivalve mollusk typically found in coastal areas with sandy or muddy substrates. This species is found in various coastal areas of Southeast Asia, including Indonesia. It inhabits shallow waters with sandy or muddy substrates, where it can bury itself and feed on plankton and organic matter.

Third Clutch of Hawksbill Turtle Hatchlings Released!

Third Clutch of 132 baby Hawksbill turtles successfully reintroduced to natural habitat.

In a significant stride towards marine conservation, Nirwana Gardens proudly announces the successful release of 132 baby Hawksbill turtles into their natural habitat. This milestone event took place at Banyu Biru Villa beach on 5th and 6th July 2024, Friday, and Saturday, marking a crucial effort in safeguarding the future of these endangered species.

Hawksbill turtles, recognized for their unique shell patterns and critical role in marine ecosystems, face numerous threats including habitat destruction, pollution, and poaching. The release of these turtles represents a collaborative effort in protecting and restoring the delicate balance of marine biodiversity.

Through initiatives like this, Nirwana Gardens continues to uphold its mission of marine conservation and environmental stewardship. By engaging with local communities, Nirwana Gardens remains committed to the long-term preservation of these endangered species.

The Green and Hawksbill Turtles climb ashore to the beaches of Bintan Island twice a year to lay their eggs. The Nirwana Gardens conservation team collects and buries the eggs in a sheltered hatchery to protect them from predators and poachers. The eggs will be conserved for approximately 60 days before they hatch.
